PRICE TWOPENCE

"A Year Ago"

If this paper were old enough, and the editors' fancy led him to indulge in a reminiscent column similar to those so popular among our heavier contemporaries, we might have seen in this issue a reminder that on the 31st of October, one year ago, the Edward Turner Sims Library was opened by H.R.H. the Duke of York. It had been used for a short time before, but its official life started on that date, and its anniversary offers a suitable occasion for a kind of stock-taking. Has the Library fulfilled expectations; has the handsome building given by the Misses Sims added as much as was hoped, not only to the appearance, but to the working facilities of the College? The answer is, emphatically, yes. In many ways it has exceeded expectations. Students are coming to read there in such steadily increasing numbers that already more furniture is necessary. (Thirty more chairs are already on order.) Clearly the new building is popular, and everyone who remembers the old library rooms, overcrowded, noisy and draughty, will feel thankful for the spaciousness and quiet of the new place.

In our satisfaction at the excellence of the new building, however, we must not forget the books. After all, the librarium is the place where books are kept, and the derivation reminds us that books are the essential factor. One could plan a well-lit, well-warmed, quiet and comfortable hall, where people could read and write, but this, without books, would not be a library—except perhaps in luxury hotel or liner parlance.

In a college library, indeed, one can hardly forget the importance of books: "set texts" and "prescribed reading" loom so largely and inevitably along the degree course. But what of the by-ways outside the course? In a library like ours, founded on a collection dating from 1880 and added to, since, by the gifts of many book lovers, there is a large variety of riches. How many users of the Library realise that we possess a copy of the Authorised Version of the Bible of 1611, the year of its publication? And a report on the Supplies to the troops in the Crimean War, that belonged to Florence Nightingale; and books containing the signatures of Isaac Newton and of Dante Gabriel Rossetti? These are random examples of books whose interest is chiefly antiquarian but there are many others which have a source-book value, for example, the long set of "The Gentleman's Magazine," the original issues of "The Spectator," and the early volumes of the Royal Society's "Philosophical Transactions." Again, there are small but interesting collections on music and the other arts, which are worth investigating.

It must not be supposed that this is leading up to an exhortation to "browsing." This metaphor has had an unfortunate popularity in connection with libraries and has been definitely harmful in its way. It suggests something so casual, so effortless, so unplanned and lacking in initiative, that many self-respecting people will hardly linger for a moment near the book-shelves, for fear they should be thought to "browse." Certainly much entertainment can be had from casual exploration; but when exploration has led to something interesting, this something must be noted, followed up and developed, if it is to give any lasting pleasure. The form of enjoyment proper to a library demands a metaphor of quickening intelligence rather than of dulled content. Browsing like the game of bowls, would be left to later middle-age.

Reading for recreation is, of course, part of education in its wider aspect and it is to be hoped that before long the Students' Council will be able to act on the suggestion already made in one or two quarters, to provide a Common Room Library. If it were possible to build up a good collection of travel books, biographies, and works of general interest, too ephemeral perhaps to be included in the College Library but still well worth reading, it would surely be well appreciated, and gifts from outside sources would probably be forthcoming.

In the matter of gifts, I should like to record with gratitude one made at the end of last session: a joint gift from the members of the German Honours Class of some half-dozen excellent books for the German literature section. In the sense of the small girl who thought that "returns" meant "presents," I take leave to wish the Library "many happy returns."

EDITORIAL

Much as we enjoy and make use of our privilege of grumbling at every possible thing, even the most hardened grumbler among us must admit that our College and Halls are situated "in surroundings of considerable natural beauty." Before the past week of wind and rain had done its damage, this beauty was probably at its best. Looking from the Library across the brickfields to the Common it was hard not to believe that it was the edge of the Forest, and the trees bordering the Avenue were golden for the whole length of it. The trees (especially the apple trees) at the back of Connaught Hall look very good; but those of us who are fortunate enough to live in Stoneham are the most privileged in our environment, what with the clear yellow of maple and horse-chestnut, the wonderful colour-gradations of the old medlar, the crimson of the creeper leaves above the Salmon Pool, and the glowing red and orange of the crab apples. The faults of our surroundings come very readily to mind, but we have much to be thankful for.

Our pious hope expressed last week, that winning would become infectious is apparently being realised, as Soccer has continued on the whole to be successful, and Rugger has now taken to winning or drawing instead of losing.

In view of the letters published in last week's "Wessex News" on the Book Scheme, what the President of the Union said about it at the S.U. Meeting is particularly interesting. Those in charge of the Bookshop cannot perform miracles more than anyone else, and we must be reasonable in our demands.

The Business Manager would be grateful if subscribers who have not yet sent in their subscriptions to him would do so as soon as possible.

1. The Editor is not responsible for the views expressed in signed articles.

2. Correspondents are asked to make their letters as brief and to the point as possible.

3. The Editor regrets that, owing to lack of space, it is impossible to print Society reports unless they have genuine news value.

THIS GOD—"GAMES."

Mr. Wife's leading article on the "Athletic Union" in last week's "Wessex News" was probably read with grunts of approval by the majority of College students but others received it with mixed feelings of resentment and amusement. The writer, consciously or unconsciously, apes the "old school tie" cad and it would be a real treat to hear the Western Brothers reading his first paragraph.

The article begins with the quotation (obviously misinterpreted for the occasion). Hence, for some four hundred lines, the writer rants and rumbles about the A1 England of the past, and the C3 nation of to-day, glibly inserting the catch-phrases to be found at a glance in any of our penny dailies. The vital cause of the poor physical condition of many of our countrymen, Mr. Wife, is malnutrition and extreme mental depression consequent upon long spells of unemployment, and the fault lies rather "in the stars" not "in ourselves."

I have no quarrel with the bulk of the "leader" but disagree with one or two of the views expressed. By all means let us encourage physical fitness "in this our England," and let us, as students of U.C.S., support and recognise the endeavours of our Athletic Union officials. However, I refute Mr. Wife's contention that there is only one means of attaining and maintaining physical fitness, i.e., games. The fellow who indulges in long rambles or cycle rides in the country is taking a much more natural and equally beneficial form of exercise than if he were to spend 90 minutes trying to kick a sphere between two wooden posts. Moreover, it is a medical fact, that if in the well trained athlete the fire glows more brightly it also burns out sooner. Let me quote an excerpt from the Cambridge Professor of Anatomy's letter to "The Times." "The feats of daring, of mental and physical endurance, whether at the equator or at the poles... are the product of the spirit of the British race not of the gymnasium or the football field." In Scott's last diary after feats of incomparable physical endurance is the advice "Make the boy interested in

To the Editor of Wessex News.

Dear Sir,

Probably my previous letter relating to the Fur Trade lacked clarity; certainly Mr. Newman has missed the point. Obviously many English fur-bearing animals do considerable damage, and their activities must be restricted; I would merely protest that present methods are unnecessarily barbarous. As for the fox, but for its artificial preservation in order that certain folk may enjoy the pleasure of pursuing it to a brutal death, it would probably by now be extinct.

But this is rather apart from the real Fur Trade. I would suggest that if a boycott were placed on all furs obtained in a cruel and agonising way, traders would soon see to it that their furs were placed on the "White List," indicating that certain standards of humanity and decency had been observed.

Yours sincerely,
R. A. Shannon.

Match Results:—

"B" lost to the Rooks, 5—1.

"C" lost to Taunton's "B",

This week, the "A" play The Rooks, and the "B", Old Tauntonians.

Like other clubs, the Chess Club is handicapped by lack of support, particularly by men who are "working," even on the Dip. course! But the juniors are giving the "C" team good support.

From our Cookery Expert

The following recipe for rabbit stew was found on one of the news-sheets circulated in the Alcazar: The cat should be stripped of fur in accordance with the methods of the "Fur Crusade," drawn and quartered. It should then be boiled for two hours in distilled water to cover, with a pinch of bicarb. added to combat the sulphurous taste.

Both Spaghetti Cheese and Tomato and Cheese Pastry are usually spoilt by an almost crude amount of cheese being added, making the dish taste very strongly of it. The secret is to enlist the services of the cheese rather than attempt its consumption in one operation. The best known method, discovered at an institution famous for its researches into dietetical problems, is not to place the cheese in bodily, but to treat the dish when piping hot, by passing a large piece of cheese over the dish at a height of approximately three inches so that it passes through the steam, giving a delicate flavour to the dish.

Trifle.—The beauty of this dish lies not in its ingredients, but in other qualities. Only custard and sponge cakes need be used to make this attractive sweet, but it should be carefully arranged and tastefully served in an ancient hip-bath. The latter may be sterilised, but if the diners never gather in it is hardly necessary. Or it may be served up from a new clean enamelled pail, which should be kept solely for this purpose.

Vegetable Roll.—This dish is a well-known surprise item at Hallowsen feasts. The object of it is to prepare it from ingredients which separately would be edible and to preserve this edible appearance. Dumplings, carrots, peas and beans form the best basis, but aloe should be added. The whole should be boiled to a paste. The surprise is that anyone eats it at all, considering the nauseating taste.

Stewed Steak.—The cook should find a Lecturer and a Horse. The Horse should be humanely shot, but the Lecturer should not. This should ensure the meat being suitable to form a firm basis for heavy exercise.

Further discoveries should be communicated to the Business Manager of this paper, who will be eternally grateful for them.

natural history if you can; it is better than games."

Psychologically too, this constant nagging of a fellow with no aptitude for games to make an exhibition of himself on the field is dangerous. These physical fitness manias are better out of the teaching profession.

Nor was the appeal necessary. If statistics were taken, they would probably show that 90% of the men in College take part in athletic exercise. In an engaging sport among the women, I rather think Mr. Wife is rushing in where angels fear to tread).

First Rugby Victory SOCCER WIN IN U.A.U. MATCH

Weather Spoils Many Matches

To the Editor of Wessex News.

Dear Sir,
I should like to bring the attention of all students to the fact that the Swimming Club now has a Club Night on Thursday from 9-10 p.m. at the Corporation Baths. Two coaches, one for men and one for women, are in attendance during the hour, and are willing to give instruction to both swimmers and non-swimmers. By holding this Club Night, all students obtain reduced prices at the Baths at all times, and we should like to urge all students to make it successful by attending regularly on Thursday nights. The price of entrance to the Baths is 3d. at any time.

Yours faithfully,
Charles L. Shepherd,
Hon. Sec.,

A.F.C. v. Reading Univ.

On Wednesday College played their first U.A.U. match, being at home to Reading. College were at full strength and were in high hopes of pulling off a good win. Robson lost the toss and the visitors decided to have the sun at their backs. Throughout the first half play was very even but exceedingly fast. The first thing of note was a good shot by Thorp which just missed the post. Shortly afterwards Pettit drove in a beautiful shot which was saved at the expense of a corner. Play continued to sweep from end to end but the defences on both sides dominated the game and half-time arrived with the score 0-0.

Reading went ahead within two minutes of the second half but Eden headed a centre from Wallace into the net to equalise within one minute. A ding-dong struggle followed, each side striving hard for a goal. College went further ahead when Thorp put Wallace away and the winger ran on to place the ball in the net.

Several chances were missed but both teams kept up a cracking pace. The whole of the College team were now playing well. Newland worked his way through and although tackled by three defenders he steered the ball into the net. College were now the superior side but Robson had to bring off two or three fine saves. Reading were far from a beaten side and staged several attacks but they were beaten back by a resolute defence. In the closing minutes Wallace received from Ashworth and raced half the length of the field to score Southampton's fourth goal. Altogether it was a very hard game, neither side giving anything away. Robson, Cowling and Wallace deserve special mention for their fine football and none worked harder than Ashworth. If they keep this up College should find their rightful place—champions of the Southern Division of the U.A.U. championship.

A.F.C. v. Andover Town.

In the first round of the Hampshire Senior Cup College were drawn away to Andover. The same side was fielded as represented College against Reading except that Eden was absent with a pulled muscle and Belton deputised. It was pouring with rain when the teams came out and the pitch was sodden with the recent heavy rain. Winning the toss College had the wind and rain behind them. It was soon evident that the greasy ball and slippery surface would make good football impossible. Andover were definitely quicker on the ball but the defence was holding its own. Robson saved a penalty and brought off several good saves from the Andover forwards. The Andover right-winger then got away, cut in and gave Robson no chance with his shot. Wallace and Ashworth were playing well and did most of the attacking. Wallace came very near to scoring when he beat the goal-keeper with a good shot but one of the Andover backs headed clear. Just before half-time Collins who had played a splendid game was hurt badly and during his absence Andover scored again.

In the second half College were mainly on the defensive but Robson was in magnificent form in goal. Repeatedly he saved from the Andover forwards and showed a finished technique in his handling of the greasy ball. Just before the finish Andover scored from a maul, Robson being unsighted. College missed two good chances. Collins who had pluckily returned to play well, was hurt again and had to leave the field with his ankle dislocated but even with ten men College held their own until the final whistle. Several of the team were beaten by the state of the ground and the quicker tackling of the Andover men. Considering the awful conditions College did quite well and were not disgraced in losing 3-0.

EDITORIAL ATHLETE

We learn that Alastair Geddes, first editor of this journal, is to turn out shortly at side-left for the Staff of his Essex School. There is considerable interest being shown in the Eastern counties. Mens sana in corpore sano.

SIGNIFICANT?

Is there any significance in the news that the Captain of Soccer is to play hockey against the girls of his school?

WOMEN'S HOCKEY.

1st XI v. Parkstone Ladies. The hockey team on Wednesday had hoped to end their run of failures but immediately the match began it was apparent that Parkstone were definitely the superior team. They were quicker, tackled back immediately on losing the ball and seemed to have much more enthusiasm. In contrast the College team played indifferently throughout the first half. It was not surprising, therefore, at half time, to find College down 1-6. Certainly some of these goals should never have been the goal, but the fact remains that College never looked like winning.

After half time play was more evenly contested and each team added three goals to their score. Unless the hockey team really "gets going" quickly the immediate outlook is not very bright. At the present time the only thing we can do is to try and impress upon all who play in the team, the need for more team spirit and ask them to try as much as ever they can instead of turning out half-heartedly, caring little whether we win or lose.

MEN'S HOCKEY CLUB.

Report of matches played by the Club: 1st XI versus R.A.F.

Worthy Down, Draw, 4 all.

The problem of suitable wing halves has not yet been solved, this match showed very clearly the weakness in defence which was caused by the halves not sticking to their men and in not recovering quick enough. If the defence had been just a bit more reliable in this direction the College would have scored a comfortable victory.

1st XI versus R.A.F. Boscombe Down, scratched.

ROWING: Men.

There is great enthusiasm and promise in the Men's Rowing Club, and not only are many men being devotedly cared for, but a good First VIII seems likely.

Women.

In their unofficial way the oarswomen make steady progress. Our subscription list for their support is still open.

U.C.S. v. R.A.F. Gosport Away, Oct. 28th.

In a very open game at Gosport the College beat the R.A.F. by 11 pts. to 6 pts. The College attacked from the kick-off and pressed hard but it was not until after 20 minutes play that they opened the score, when R. Wife, the full-back, made a good run up-field, scored a try, which was not converted. This was followed closely by a try by R. Wife near the corner flag.

Score, half-time: 6-0 to the College.

Gosport scored very early in the second half, but the College soon went further ahead with a try by Moir which he also converted. Gosport replied with one more try to complete the scoring. Result: U.C.S. 11 pts. R.A.F. Gosport 6 pts.

Saturday, Nov. 7th. 1st XI v. Portsmouth Municipal College (home). CROSS COUNTRY CLUB.

The Cross Country Club gained a comfortable victory over the R.A.F. Calshot, by 30 points to 48. Owing to the recent heavy rain the course was very sodden and made the going difficult. The start was made in a high wind; Lawrence and Moore set the pace, closely followed by Wilkes and Coupland of Calshot, and Newton-Smith, Pearce, Dukes and Lockyer of Southampton. At the end of two miles Lawrence was leading, with Newton-Smith, Moore and Wilkes on his heels. The positions remained unchanged until the fourth mile, when Newton-Smith and Wilkes began to draw ahead. Newton-Smith, who was running on the course for the first time, cleverly allowed Wilkes to shield him from the wind, until about a mile from home, when he started to pull away from Wilkes, and arrived home twelve yards in front, to win in 35 minutes. With-in a minute he was joined by Lawrence, Coupland, third and fourth, Burroughs and Moore tying for fifth place and a few seconds later by Dukes. U.C.S. gained four out of the first six places.

Meditations of an Idler

Once upon a time a man came into the Library with a huge clock which he fixed on the wall above the entrance. We looked at the time by it, noted it, and he took the clock down. I wish he had left it up because sometimes, having a bad memory and not being good at reckoning, I want to look at it again. A trace of this mysterious deed has remained, apparently for all time, in two scrappy bits of wire protruding from an unpleasant cavity in the wall.

May I suggest —

(a) That the clock be restored; or,

(b) That the wires be removed and the cavity filled up; or,

(c) That a clock be placed over each archway at the north and south ends of the Library.

I understand that a missive appeared in this honourable paper last term about this clock-famine. When I am working—sorry—sitting in the Library, I do like now and then to know what time it is. Could we, please, have at least one little clock?

Another thing that worries me when I am pretending to work in the Library is what to do with the scraps of paper that I have finished scribbling on. I find that I must either leave them on the table or floor and thus call down the wrath of one of the assistant librarians on my head, or save the bits of paper carefully and wait till I am passing one of the baskets in the Covered Way or Common Rooms. I could of course throw them into the light-bowls up on the walls, but that would call for skill in aiming, at which I am not good. Maybe we could have waste-paper baskets as well as a clock or two?

P. S. Kenyon.

It has always been agreed that the Boat Club are descendants of the galley-using nations of old. This is proved conclusively by the way in which they are now imitating the Ancient Egyptians, by using a floating contraption (of Wickens's construction) to indicate the height of the water. They are now saving up to buy a sacred crocodile.

Dear Sir,

While still on British soil and feeling tired (only a little) from Russell Hall Entertainment I would like to express my deep thanks to everyone in U.C.S. for helping to make the year I spent at Coll. such an unforgettable experience. I hope to see a good many members of this college in Germany during the next years, and will do everything to make their stay just as enjoyable and fruitful. Auf Wiedersehen!

The Common Room.

To the Editor of Wessex News.

Dear Sir,

Members of this College, because of the accidents of accommodation, are more disposed to condemn than to praise the Refectory. They fail to realise that the Refectory is the most important institution in College, not because of the food it provides but because of the activities it makes possible. Nor are its services simply social; the academic, intellectual and corporate life of College rests upon the fact of there being a Refectory capable of accommodating a large number of students.

The College is a place of education, and the new library is a focus of study. But the library can only be used fully when students remain in College between and after lectures. Science centres in the laboratories, and the programme of scientific education and study depends upon the students being able to spend an unbroken day in College.

The merits of the Refectory go beyond these basic facts. This is a College, not a federation of Halls: a single body of Staff and Students with a common life. That common life is based upon the Refectory.

The symptoms of community are many. One is the use of the lunch hour for the meeting of all sorts and kinds of societies, including the Union itself. The College talks together and thinks together in the lunch hour and on Saturday mornings. Another is the social use of Saturdays, when Faculty Societies bring the College together in gayer mood. The comprehensive Refectory on the spot makes these things and the less formal congregation of students possible.

The Halls are far flung and inaccessible. They are more than Hostels and less than Colleges. There is but one College and it rests on the Refectory. Distance makes it so, and we are grateful for an institution which, by catering for us all, gives charm, interest and academic zeal to our College days. This College stands out from its peers because it has combined the community of College with the individuality of its Halls. It has thereby contributed a great deal to the development of University education in the widest sense, and the Refectory is its one foundation.

Dear Sir,

May we through your paper invite comments on the manner in which the S.U. Meeting was conducted on Oct. 30th? Was it not a trifle irregular? Was it in order for the Chairman to "talk out" a proposal without first waiting for the motion to be seconded? One gentleman in particular from the back of the house proposed an amendment. Why did the Chairman not wait for this to be seconded and then attempt to move the house against the Refectory? Alternatively, why was the withdrawal of the motion not requested?

We are ready to be corrected, but it appears that in future the S.U. Meetings could be conducted in a more democratic manner.

Yours etc.

Dear Sir,

S.C.M. last year seemed to have died, one we were told by a large number of critics, helpful and otherwise, to its failure to present Christianity as in any practical and vital way connected with modern conditions. But how far, we wondered, was it due to the general apathy towards something in which, we believe, rather than in any system of political change, lies the hope of an apparently hopeless world.

There will be various opportunities in the near future for discovering the truth about this. A meeting is to be held at 1.20 on Thursday for the formation of a discussion group. In this it is intended to thrash out some of the main points of the very foundation of the position of religion in life to-day; to enquire into the necessity for religion in any form; into the Christian life demands of the individual; into the vexed question of public worship and toleration, religious, moral and political. Actual subjects will be chosen to meet the demands of those forming the group, which being led in the spirit of enquiry by one of agnostic tendencies will give ample opportunity for the expression of all opinion, favourable or antagonistic, or will prove the general apathy of the students.

Another of its purposes is to introduce the Quadrennial Conference, at which 2000 students of all nationalities will try to discover how "God speaks to this generation." U.C.S. is required to send a delegation of up to 8 students representing as widely as possible thought and activity in College.

Other activities—of which more later—will be an attempt to apply Christianity to the study and
